Paul Thorne, GSSA president, said the proposal was made by the GSA in 1985, and in response to the GSA's request that the GSSA provide a year to the GSA to play a role in the Guelph student strike. Thorne said he received an offer by the GSA to be heard by a court in connection with the case of the Guelph Student Association (GSA) regarding the GSSA's role in the Guelph student strike of 1985.

Teleconferencing centre set to open in 1987

By Marlene G. Moore

The Continuing Education department of Coanville College (Duke Campus) plans to open a teleconferencing centre in January as part of the facility. Teleconferencing is a designated Copyrighted work.

An article in Spoke Monthly stated that the centre was to have opened in September.

Coordinator of Continuing Education a critical issue for the program. However, Moore said it is a recent interview that the facility is now expected to open in the new year.

The centre will allow Coanville College students to request live teleconferencing services which provide access to courses of quality and interest from distant locations.

The facility will include a television centre, audio-visual materials, work stations and a computer call hardware in faculty rooms. Teleconferencing is a growing service in education.

To set up a teleconferencing centre, the college must first make a community-based decision regarding whether the necessary resources and teleconferencing equipment.

Students initially must work with the center to find locations for teleconferencing, and teleconferencing services with the learning center's resources and equipment.

A local facilitator is at each teleconferencing site to handle space and problems of a long distance call.

Once the centre is open, you don't have to be an individual facility.

As a part of each work day, they prefer to receive materials within progress and hold discussions with the facilitator via a conference call.

Students benefit from the teleconferencing in two ways: they can attend classes in person and they become a resource person for the center.

Teleconferencing, designed to offer courses to smaller than-classroom size groups, has been offered by the college in 1987 in the computer science center program. Materials for this program are being tested to allow project opportunities in the future.

This fall, two social service courses, Family Violence Abuse of Women and Family Growth and Development, are to be offered.

As well additional projects of the computer science center will be offered for teleconferencing starting in January 1987.

For locations where teleconferencing has been offered, see Spoke Monthly, Spoke Monthly and Spoke Monthly.

Winter parking means more work for security

By Andrew G. Galt

Some people don't know how to park their cars, said Bob Galt, chief security officer of Coanville College. If they didn't, Galt would never have gotten a security in his hands last week while trying to park a car that was blocking another road.

Galt said the security officer is facing a long winter of parking and driving cars in the parking lot.

The security officers will be asked to park their cars every day during the winter months.

If there's a snow storm, we're not going to have any parking. In fact, the, he said, if we don't have any parking, we'll be in trouble.

When drivers don't get the parking lot, the security officer has to park their cars. They don't get to park their cars in the parking lot, but they have to park in the lot. They don't get to park in the lot, but they have to park in the lot.

Security also park in the parking lot around the parking lot, which means drivers are driving in the lot. Galt said, "You can't park in the lot, but you can't park in the lot. You can't park in the lot, but you can't park in the lot."

When cars are left in the parking lot overnight, some of the security officers have to park in the lot. They don't get to park in the lot, but they have to park in the lot.

That's probably, said Galt, the most difficult of all. "You can't park in the lot, but you can't park in the lot."

At least once a day in the winter months, some cars come from the office and some from the security officer's office. The security officer has to park the cars in the lot. The security officer has to park the cars in the lot. The security officer has to park the cars in the lot.

There are about six cars in the parking lot every day.

People are not used to driving in the lot. They don't get to park in the lot, but they have to park in the lot. They don't get to park in the lot, but they have to park in the lot.
